Dear Mr. Giuliani,

Now that you are out of the presidential race, we would like to be the first to offer you a job that will use your skills in dealing with disasters. As PETA's Animal Emergency Response Division ambassador, you would use your influence to get PETA's public service announcements (like this one:

<http://www.petatv.com/tvpopup/video.asp?video=chain&Player=wm>) shown on television and heard on the radio. The PSAs advise people never to abandon their dogs, cats, birds, and other animals to perish in fires, floods, hurricanes, or other extreme-weather situations. You would meet with officials who make contingency plans to evacuate residents and care for displaced residents to remind them of the importance of keeping animal-integrated families united and all living beings safe.

The political storm may be over for you, but with extreme-weather conditions increasing across the country, I believe that you could fill a vital role by stepping in to look out for the most vulnerable of us all.

I would like to mention that there would be plenty for you to do in New York too. After 9/11, PETA workers were on the ground outside the hot zone working to reunite anguished guardians with their animals and pleading with officials to rescue beloved four-legged and winged victims from buildings cordoned off even to owners. Your involvement would have made reunions easier to arrange. We may have criticized you in the past for being a dairy-industry and circus booster, but perhaps a new day requires a new relationship. Your ambassadorship would mark a new era on the protective side of animal issues.

We wish you well and look forward to a positive response.

Very truly yours,

Ingrid E. Newkirk
President
